1. In the middle of April, 1954, the existence of an underground youth organization was discovered in Wolsztyn (Voivodship of Poznan), the members of which were boys from the local primary schools, most of them 14 to 16 years of age.
2. [redacted] along the line from Wolsztyn to Zbąszyn
 [redacted] several boys [redacted] were climbing up the telegraph poles along the line, and were breaking the porcelain insulators with stones. [redacted]
 [redacted] one of them was recognized and was later arrested [redacted] 25X1

3. After two days of interrogation and beating the boy admitted that he belonged to an "underground organization"; the head of which was the son of the public prosecutor in Wolsztyn. About 60 boys were arrested and their cache, which was in an old German shelter near the village of Chonenin (1½ km. from Wolsztyn) was liquidated. Considerable stocks of food, various kinds of tools, and old firearms collected in the forest were found in the shelter.
4. After interrogation the boys were temporarily released under police supervision. The inquiry followed the line of trying to establish who instigated the formation of the organization, whether they listened to foreign broadcasts and what subjects were discussed by their parents at home.
